"The Power Broker: Robert Moses and the Fall of New York" by Robert A. Caro

Caro is famous to many for his multi-volume biography of Lyndon B. Johnson, but before he wrote thousands of pages on LBJ, he wrote over a thousand on Robert Moses. Moses was never elected to any public office, but was for decades the most powerful man in New York. At one point, he held 12 different offices simultaneously and the layout of modern New York City - the good, the bad, and the ugly - is much his handiwork. It is a tale of brilliance but of obsession with power. It is a tale of vision but a vision that became irreparably skewed when the visionary lost his connection to the people impacted by his vision. That's a lesson that anyone in power could stand to learn from.

"Holistic Management: a Commonsense Revolution to Restore Our Environment" by Allan Savory with Jody Butterfield

I plan to write much more about this book in the future. It is a dense, complex textbook. Allan Savory is arguably the world's foremost mind on grazing livestock on grasslands. Over 50 years of research and experience are distilled into a definitive explanation of how grasslands work, why they must be grazed by animals to operate properly, and why holistic management of grasslands is the key to managing our environment. Savory's ideas are often shocking to agriculture producers and environmental activists alike, but his ideas work and he has the experience to prove it. His concept of holistic management is a foundational tool for leaders who manage human systems and it should be considered in management by elected officials and business owners as well as land managers.
