Texas Beef Checkoff begins

Beef has a strong history in the Lone Star State and Texas cattle producers recently voted to further invest in their business.

That investment—the Texas Beef Checkoff - began October 1.

"Amid the consecutive years of severe drought, the U.S. cow herd dropped to the lowest it's been since the 1950s," said Coke County Farm Bureau President John Ross Copeland. "As cow numbers fell, so did the annual funds collected to support the beef industry."

That triggered cattle industry organizations to ask the Texas Department of Agriculture (TDA) for a referendum, creating a state beef checkoff administered by the Beef Promotion and Research Council of Texas.

The dollar-per-head ranchers will pay into the state checkoff program will allow Texas producers to conduct beef promotion, marketing, research and education programs for consumers in Texas and around the globe.

"Lack of rainfall, extreme temperatures and the need for ample forages are risks Texas cattle producers face every day," said. "But the state checkoff will help alleviate those risks by driving the demand for beef and bringing profitability back to the cattlemen."

The state-level checkoff program is financed through a refundable assessment at each point cattle are sold in Texas. The state dollar will supplement the national checkoff program, which producers approved in 1988.
