Desserts needed for Bronte Barbeque

Add Hunters for the Hungry to Your Check List

Hunters help local communities each deer season by donating deer to the Texas Hunters for the Hungry program. Last year, hunters donated 152,962 pounds of venison, resulting in more than 600,000 servings. Of that, 5,358 pounds were donated in Coke County alone.

According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, one out of every five households in Texas struggles to afford food. Food assistance agencies such as food banks, play an important role in helping families fill the nutrition gap. Obtaining adequate protein is often difficult for low income families and individuals. As a result, venison donations are a favorite.

If you are a hunter, consider adding Hunters for the Hungry to your check list as you prepare for deer season. It is easy to participate: locate a participating meat processor; drop off your tagged, legally harvested white-tail or mule deer; and pay a nominal fee to cover basic processing costs. A receipt is issued for tax purposes. This season, Hunters for the Hungry is working with Menchaca's Processing in Robert Lee to accept venison donations. To learn more about the program, visit www.tacaa.org/hunters-for-the-hungry or call (800) 992-9767, ext. 506.
