Wildflowers and Blooming Plants Putting on a Show at Texas State Parks

Texas State Parks have gone Technicolor with a show stopping display of bright blues, vibrant pinks, deep reds and rich yellows.

Texas is the home to more than 5,000 species of wildflowers and recent rains are sure to usher in an explosion of color before the end of the season. More than 90 Texas State Parks present some of the best and safest places to view and photograph nature's bounty of wildflowers and blooming shrubs and trees.

"Spring wildflower shows have been spectacular in East, Central, North, coastal and South Texas landscapes recently," said Jason Singhurst, botanist with the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department. "With recent rains blanketing a large percentage of Texas, we are experiencing astonishing wildflower displays and should expect increasing wildflower intensity through April and into May. However, be aware that the National Weather Service three-month precipitation outlook has the Lone Star State tapering off with below average rain in late spring and early summer."

Presently, every region of the state is presenting different varieties of wildflowers, including:
