Coke County farmers help connect their farms to the community

Farmers in Coke County will have their chance to reach out to the community and talk about how their food gets from the field to your fork during Texas Food Connection Day. Each farmer will seek to spark conversations with their consumers while they cook and serve hamburgers to local residence of Coke County Tuesday May 2, 2017 from 11 a.m. – 2 p.m. The cost of this hamburger lunch is a donation of a canned good item or non-perishable food benefiting the local food pantry.

“Many consumers have questions about where and how their food is grown. This event gives farmers and ranchers the opportunity to start up a conversation and answer those questions or concerns,” said John Ross Copeland, Coke-Sterling County Farm Bureau president.

Although Food Connection Day is only held once a year, County farmers are open to having more conversations about their farm practices.

“We work hard every day to provide families with fresh, nutritious and affordable food,” John Ross said. “We’re looking forward to connecting with our consumers today, tomorrow and in the future.”

Texas Food Connection Day was established to connect farmers with their consumers and spark conversations about agriculture and food-related issues, including affordability, nutrition, animal welfare, profitability and productivity.

“Texas Food Connection Day is about sharing what we do on our farms and ranches to grow our food, fiber and fuel,” John Ross said. “We want to share the stories of our family farms and ranches, because just 2 percent of the American population is responsible for growing our food.”

For more information about local activities and media opportunities, contact the Coke-Sterling County Farm Bureau office at 325-453-4505.
