Despite sticker changes, farm trailers, trucks require attention

Two steps, one sticker. New legislation has reduced the number of stickers Texans are required to have on their vehicles. But it hasn't cut down on drivers' responsibility.

"We're still required to both inspect and register our vehicles," said John Ross Copeland, Coke County Farm Bureau president. "Farm trucks and trailers are no different. It's important that Coke County farmers and ranchers still follow through with the steps they completed prior to the change in legislation."

Farm trailers with a gross vehicle weight under 4,000 pounds need neither registration nor inspection.

Farm trailers between 4,000 and 34,000 pounds do not need inspection and can be registered with a farm tag provided that trailer is used exclusively to haul commodities, supplies and items related to farming.

"The rules haven't changed," John Ross Copeland said. "But it's important with this sticker changeover that we not forget to inspect and register farm vehicles and trailers that need it."

Drivers caught without proper inspection or registration could face a traffic citation for the infraction.

Rules for registering farm vehicles and trailers can be found online at www.txdps.state.tx.us/cve/Farm.htm.
