Wildfires leave more than ashes behind

When the fences are gone, as well as the grass, cattle raisers are going to have to make some tough decisions on whether to try to feed or go to market with their cattle, according to Texas AgriLife Extension Service personnel.

Across the state of Texas, it's the same story over and over - the grass is gone, destroyed by fire, hay is short and soil moisture is almost nonexistent. Some tough decisions lie ahead for ranchers caught in the wake of the recent fast-moving wildfires, a Texas AgriLife Extension Service specialist said. "Something that is important, after they get through the emotional part of this, is looking at the longterm," said Dr. Ted McCollum, AgriLife Extension livestock specialist. "With current conditions, if we don't get significant rain in the next several weeks, those rangelands that burned aren't going to be able to carry many cattle, if any, until next fall. And then, grazing will be limited."

Ranchers planning to feed cattle after the fires need to consider that, because of the drought in other parts of the state, hay supplies are going to be short, McCollum said. Hay will probably have to come from some other region. Ranchers opting to continue feeding their animals have several options, he said. Lowquality hay, or another roughage source such as cotton moisture to continue growth burrs, can be supplemented before any grazing should be with concentrated nutrients to considered, McCollum said. balance out what the cattle Without moisture, it may be need, McCollum said.

cows for several months. "Immediate selling may be a necessary move for cattle that have been injured by the fire. Any cattle that have suffered heating of the feet, blistering of the udder, excessive smoke inhalation and other insults should be marketed before the injuries progress to the point that the cattle are unmerchantable."

The potential for pasture recovery is another factor to consider when keeping cattle.

The timing and the rate at which the fires moved may mean the damage to the plant community might not be as bad as some think it is, he said, but the problem is soil moisture. The recovery of those areas is going to be slow. "If we get any rainfall in the next month or so, the recovery may be better than people think it is," McCollum said. "The key factor - can we get any timely rainfall?"

But regardless of whether the rain comes, the carrying capacity is going to be lower than normal. Ranchers may face stocking at less than half of the normal rates, he said. The primary grasses need to accumulate some forage and have adequate soil next fall, after forage goes know it is hard to do, but
